B7. Australia is the sixth largest country being in the world. Eighty-five per cent of people live in the big
B8. cities, so you can travel for thousands of kilometres and never see anyone too. The first British ships
B9. arrived in Botany Bay in 1788 – they were 'prison ships' and when the first settlers were convicts
B10. (каторжник). Over the next 80 years, quite more than 160,000 convicts were transported to Australia
B11. from England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales either. Australia's first police force was a group of twelve
B12. of the most best-behaved convicts! Historians were met with serious hesitation when they wanted
B13. to emphasise a severe punishment applied to people whose crimes were such extremely minor. But
B14. Australia's shame it has been transformed into pride in the last century. The truth about many working
B15. class convicts has helped remove the stigma, since some else were falsely accused. The convict
B16. era left behind a number of landmarks throughout the country for each locals and travellers to explore.

- B7. Most people nowadays have a mobile phone, and it is difficult to imagine living without every one.
- B8. While in the past phones may have been a luxury, I believe they are now a necessity either. Phones
- B9. allow people to communicate easily with each other and make them social arrangements such as
- B10. meeting friends. This is been especially necessary nowadays because friends and family members do
- B11. not live such close to each other. Another reason is that many people depend on their phones to do
- B12. their jobs well. People who are often required to check emails when they are away from their office,
- B13. and being able to communicate in this way allows them to make far important decisions more easily.
- B14. Lastly, phones can rather keep people safe. You can call for help if you are in danger, and your
- B15. phone might even save your life if you have an accident as you can make use it to call an ambulance.
- B16. In its conclusion, I believe that it is not possible to live in the modern world without mobile phones.

- B7. I work as a prompter in a theatre. I specialise myself in opera, and I have to follow the performance on
- B8. stage and whisper the words if one another of the singers forgets them. It sounds boring, and it can be
- B9. demanding, but I find it very rewarding, even though there are some downsides – as with any job that I
- B10. suppose. I have to sit in a small space just like below the stage for several hours – it's cramped and
- B11. can be uncomfortable. I get used to that, and do exercises for my legs and back to keep much flexible.
- B12. It doesn't matter what clothes I am wear because no one can see me. So what do I need to do my job?
- B13. I must be musical, which I am, so it's difficult to rather stop myself singing along with the people on
- B14. stage! I also have to have so a lot of patience, but I guess it's concentration that tops the list. The singers
- B15. have to rely them on me, so they can be relaxed on stage. This feeling of trust between us develops
- B16. over time, and I regard it such as special. I love being able to contribute to a great performance.

I've been in London for about a month now. It feels like much more longer. To be honest, I didn't like it much when I first arrived. It was such cold and wet, after California! But I've changed my mind since then. I think London is enough fascinating. I very miss my friends, but since I left myself we've been chatting online a lot of. To tell the truth, I've already made some friends here. And the weather. It feels like if I haven't seen the sun for weeks! I also miss the beach – I haven't been near a surfboard for ages!

What about school? Things like Maths and Science are pretty much the same, but I have not problems with French. I've only been studied it for about a year so that everybody's much better than me. I make loads of mistakes. And I need to do more work on my British history!

According to a recent study, using a cell phone while is driving leads to over than 1.6 million car accidents every year. Out of those crashes, several end up causing serious injury and even death. So that, we can definitely understand why such many people are getting upset about motorists using their phones while they driving.

And maybe it is no time for Instagram, Facebook and the like to start banning itself photos and videos that depict the use of cell phones while behind the wheel. Distracted driving causes a thousands of deaths each of year and it's certainly not being something that should be praised or encouraged.
